Manager commentary – Q4 2024

In the fourth quarter, the S&P/TSX Composite Index showed a modest gain of 3.76%, given mixed macroeconomic conditions and monetary pressures. The energy sector faced challenges in the latter half of the quarter owing to lower expectations for global demand. Technology companies followed global trends, with those related to artificial intelligence (AI) and semiconductors gaining some traction. A few key players have driven growth within the industrials sector, highlighting the importance of strategic selection within this sector. Our portfolio has benefited from positive security selection, particularly in the materials, information technology and industrials sectors, contributing to the Fund's performance during the quarter.

The macroeconomic landscape remains uncertain given inflation trends, central bank policies and the result of the U.S. election. We aim to closely monitor related policy developments and currency fluctuations as those could have significant impacts on Canadian energy and materials sectors. We believe that a nuanced approach, attentive to policy shifts and sector vulnerabilities, will be essential for stock selection in the upcoming market landscape.

IA Clarington Canadian Dividend Fund's performance was largely driven by a select number of holdings within a few different sectors. Notably, Brookfield Asset Management Inc., Agnico Eagle Mines Ltd., GFL Environmental Inc. and Waste Connections Inc. were key contributors, benefiting from sector tailwinds. Our strategic and selective approach significantly contributed to these returns. However, The Toronto-Dominion Bank, UnitedHealth Group Inc. and Canadian Natural Resources Ltd. lagged as a result of various idiosyncrasies.

We have positioned the Fund to achieve long-term capital growth potential by focusing on the core Canadian sectors. Given our views on the energy demand necessary to support AI usage, we believe there are significant opportunities for energy companies to benefit from the AI rally. We are adopting a defensive posture in our portfolio, confident that it is well positioned to navigate upcoming uncertainties.
